Logan Wilson headed the American Council on Education from 1960 to 1971 and since 1972 has been President Emeritus. He was President and later Chancellor of the University of Texas (1953-1961) and is credited with many innovations including the introduction of selective admission examinations for the first time at a state institution. Before joining the University of Texas faculty, Dr. Wilson taught Sociology at Harvard, Maryland, Tulane and Kentucky. At Tulane and Kentucky he was chairman of the department. He also served as dean at Newcomb College of Tulane and later as vice-president and provost of the University of North Carolina. Over the years he has served on numerous boards and commissions, including the National Commission on Accrediting, Southern Regional Education Board, Fund for Advancement of Education and the Ford Foundation. He is a past chairman of the American Conference of Academic Deans, member of the Center of Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, and trustee of the Southern Research Institute. Dr. Wilson's extensive experience as a university administrator, director of the Washington, D.C. based American Council on Education, and astute scholar and teacher in the social sciences, combine to make him one of the most important commentators on higher education in the past few decades. It is hoped this bibliography will serve as a chronicle of important issues relative to higher education especially during the 1950s and 1960s.
